Recorder Classes Mystified by Squeaks

At approximately 1:05 P.M. Eastern Daylight Saving Time, a persistent squeaking sound began interrupting recorder classes all over campus. At press time, the cause of the squeaking had not been precisely determined.

In the lobby class, members speculated that it "might be Andy— or else a mouse." Other theories centered around "too much hot air" being blown into some recorders. These ideas may be correct, some investigators believe, since the squeaks sound very much like the screams

Zimmerman spoke on condition of anonymity of an instrument in pain.

The instructor from the class on the front porch claimed there were 29 of the unearthly sounds in his class during just one period yesterday.

One of the front porch recorder classes. Can you find the recorder that is squeaking? (Hint: Look for the cowboy hat.)

College president Leon Zimmerman commented in a formal interview with the Record that he "never expected this many squeaks" when he agreed to host Choral Camp at Rosedale. He also admitted closing his door more frequently during camp week than at other times during the year, leading some irresponsible minds to wonder if the squeaks are placing the whole Choral Camp program in danger.

For her part, Coordinator Swartz's face brightened when she was asked about the strange noises. "I like cacophony," she said. "The squeaks just add to the beauty of Choral Camp."

Rowdy Camper is Partially Scalped by Heavy Metal Assailant

It happened in Strauss Hall, after everyone was supposed to have settled down for the night. (This is the hall that got to eat first at lunch for good behavior. Does this seem fair?) According to testimony obtained by informants working for free, the Record has learned that a camper on the bottom bunk was "horsing around," when the springs of the top bunk seized a strand of her hair in an iron grip.

When the camper pulled loose, her hair remained in the grip of the spring, having been painfully pulled out of her head by the roots, leaving a bare spot on her scalp.

Head Nurse Verna Bender was called in to examine the wound, and said she discovered "absolutely no blood." However, the area was quite moist, a condition Bender suggested "may have been caused by brain fluid leaking out."

More all-time choral camp records.

Shortest Time to Pack

Cami and Shad Miller were on the waiting list and when they found out they could come, they had only one hour to pack before their ride left for Choral Camp. They were fifteen minutes late.

Senior-most Volunteer

At press time, it had been 77 years, 89 days, and 9 hours since volunteer cook Edna Zook was born. Yesterday it was discovered that in addition to being a good cook, she is also a good sport.

According to reports confirmed by Zook, she was sitting under a tree minding her own business yesterday afternoon when she was approached by two male counselors freshly rinsed of shaving cream, and still dripping wet. In spite of her protests, the two hugged her simultaneously. Surprisingly, the wet hugs did not dampen Zook's spirits, though they did soak her dress.

She never found out the names of the counselors and when asked if they were good looking, she professed to have "no idea!"

Choir Director Kevin Yoder has been at Choral Camp every year so far. He is a full-time music teacher in Delaware, a state that Music Director Ken Miller says "has no reason to exist. It should really be a part of Virginia or Maryland."

What is a Boomwhacker?

"Something kind of like what you hit a drum with" — Hannah Weaver, cook

"A Belgian firecracker that goes 'boom' and then 'whack'" — Joe Showalter, a camper's dad

"I don't even know what a boom is, so how could I whack it?" — Ida Beachy, dietitian

Correct Answer:

"Uh—a hollow rod that makes a [tuned] boom sound when you whack it" —Kirdan Wenger

You can almost see it coming!

Music teacher: "Has anyone ever been to another country?"

Response: "I've been to Michigan!"

GO BUCKEYES!

The Record recommends art class as a safe activity.
