First Kidnapping Attempt at Camp is Foiled

Crime-fighting photographer E. Diller captured this shot of apparent struggle

It was bound to happen one day. For years, tension has mounted as parents and campers prepare to part ways at Choral Camp early on Monday afternoon. This year, the tension for one Dad apparently became too much. Although he had brought his daughter all the way from Nashville, as the time to leave her approached, he wrapped his arms tightly around her while fixing his face with a friendly smile to ward off suspicion.

Eager to join the fun of camp, his daughter struggled against her father's powerful embrace, without immediate success. No one was hurt in the incident, and the father eventually released his daughter into the custody of one of the counselors he later described as "wearing an orange shirt."

No charges are being filed at this time, and some investigators believe the father was just seeking last-minute affection before saying good-bye. The alleged victim did not seem distressed by the encounter.

Director Feels the Heat

Camp Director Phyllis Swartz attracts a lot of praise every Choral Camp for her creative planning of a jam-packed schedule and her effective leadership of a large volunteer team. That is Swartz in the picture below, photographed at noon on Monday with the essentials of her task: radio, key bracelet, watch, folder, smile, and Diet Coke.

The Record hates to raise suspicions about anyone so worthy, but doesn't the way she is holding the Coke can suggest she may actually be advertising for Diet Coke? Is Choral Camp secretly sponsored by Diet Coke the way NASCAR drivers get corporate sponsors? What will be next, shaving cream stickers on her folder?

On Monday afternoon, apparently without consulting anyone from Diet Coke, Mrs. Swartz submitted this message for campers and staff:

Welcome!

It's just the right weather for Choral Camp—hot! It's just right because the Choral Camp Cream will feel heavenly and because the air conditioning during choir will make you feel like you're eating ice cream.

And it's just right because—just like you can tell it's Christmas (at least in Ohio) when it's cold, you can tell it's Choral Camp (for sure in Ohio) when it's hot!

So welcome to a week of being hot together, of playing together, of working together, and most of all, of praising God together.

Jonathan: "So when he sings in the shower he'll be in tune."*

"Hmmm . . . I can't decide if it was Bethany or Kyle who played this last . . . or maybe it was one of the Tims . . .

Caught in Passing

“Wow, she’s classy”

—Camper in Yellow group commenting on a woman’s portrait in the classical style

“The Romantic period is not about kissing girls . . . you’ll learn more about that later.”

—Ken Miller at the welcome assembly, before blushingly assuring parents the “more” would be about Romantic music.

“Thank you, Honey.”

“Stop calling me that, I’m not your honey!”

“Woman!”

—Lunch exchange between a romantically challenged male counselor from Delaware and a female counselor pouring water

Q: “What dessert would a string quartet eat?”

A: “Cell-O”

Youngest Staff Ever

A lot of counselors and other staff are former campers now too old to be campers, but this is the first year for a someone too young for choral camp to be on staff.

The Record could not find his name on any staff lists, but he was picking up trash at lunch, and “Staff” was clearly printed on his name tag.
