Arizona and California campers bring

By Ethan Martin

As the second week of Choral Camp 2011 dawned, Noelle and Alexis Hale from California and Ethan and Jared Bontrager from Arizona, arrived on campus and unpacked their suitcases.

According to sources, these four campers were so overjoyed at the thought of attending camp, that in haste, they had forgotten to remove the HOT AIR from their possessions before packing and departing from their respective states.

The climates in both The Golden State and The Copper State are arid, and the imported HOT AIR has wreaked some serious havoc on Ohio's naïve and unsuspecting weather system.

As temperatures reached high into the nineties late on Monday evening, thunder clouds seemed to form right over top of the Rosedale Campus and threatened their revenge against these four very inconsiderate campers, who didn't seem to be aware that the presence of the HOT AIR in their luggage

Innocent or guilty? We'll let you decide . . .

Arizonans Ethan and Jared Bontrager say they did it on purpose (just look at those ties). Californians Alexis and Noelle Hale claim it was an accident.

had such an immense impact on the weather patterns at Choral Camp.

"We sucked the air in with a vacuum," said Jared and Ethan, who seemed to be intentional about delivering this sweltering warmth to campus. However, Noelle and Alexis claim that they made sure there was no HOT AIR in their bags when they left. It must have been picked up during their flight to Choral Camp while flying over the hot California desert, they said.

All four campers claimed that the air will probably remain in the area for at least the rest of the week. Will Choral Camp be able to forgive them for creating this weather catastrophe? Whatever the case, we're all glad to know that Choral Camp is attracting campers from such faraway places, even when it does involve surviving such treacherous temperatures.

CAMPERS BRAVE HEAT WITH COURAGE, DIGNITY

Rachel Showalter spoke for us all today. The 4-year-old daughter of music instructor Deborah Showalter was walking through the mist sprayer, enjoying the feel of tiny droplets of cool water falling on her little head shortly before she made her definitive statement on the weather.

Upon leaving the cloud of mist, she said, "And now we go from wetness back to sweatness."

And from the desk of Phil Weber: Temperatures for the welcome program on Monday tied for the 2nd hottest ever – at 86.7 degrees. (Record: 90.7 degrees.)

Intercollegiate rivalries rock Choral Camp "Oh, it's on, Jared," says incensed editor

Yesterday while teaching, Jared Stutzman said, "You have to use your imagination." Looking down at a camper's Penn State T-shirt, he added, "It must be hard to use our imagination in a shirt like that. But then, I went to Ohio State, so I'm a little prejudiced."

Editor's note of warning: Really, Jared? Seriously? Were you not aware that the editor of The Rosedale Record is a Penn State graduate? Oh, it's on, Jared. It's on.
