Shaving cream is NOT the answer!

Small but committed band of nonparticipants walks a different path

Being different is never easy, but sometimes you can't avoid it; you have to march to the beat of a different drummer.

Especially if you really hate shaving cream.

This week, six campers joined together in a sit-in of sorts, only they were outdoors, and sometimes they were lying down. Nevertheless, they made their point.

"Who needs shaving cream all over your face? I know I don't," says Anna Zerkle. Anna, who is on Crew now, has been coming to Choral Camp for years, and she's never done the whole shaving cream thing.

Nora Grace Stoltzfus and others in the group have tried it, and they don't like it. "People don't mean to, but sometimes, they get it in your face!"

The staunch little group doesn't want any trouble; they just want to sit in peace in a shaving-cream-free zone while others slide around on the tarp in a frenzied fashion. So far, camp authorities have accommodated their request.

However, Camp Coordinator Collette Slaubaugh believes it's all a big misunderstanding. "Clearly," she says, "they're holding a peace rally because they mistakenly believe the shaving cream is actually wool from our mascot, Cengiz."

Camp Director Matt Showalter maintained a stony silence on the topic. "No comment!" was all he would say.
