First-time campers speak up

The Record is happy to present an exclusive interview with first-time campers Jaxon Miller and Luke Yoder. Both campers are 11 and attend Light-in-the-Valley Chapel in Sugarcreek, Ohio.

When asked what he liked best about Choral Camp so far, Jaxon said that he enjoyed yesterday's Get Wet "because it was a lot of fun. (For non-Choral Campers, Get Wet involves campers throwing around a lot of wet sponges while sliding on a slippery tarp).

Luke said he really liked playing GaGa Ball.

Why did they come to camp?

Jaxon: "We saw it in our church and we thought it would be fun."

Luke said he came because Jaxon was coming and also "because I really like music."

What have they learned?

Luke: "I play recorder and I didn't know the F or the C note—and now I guess I do!"

Jaxon: "I've learned how to read the notes on the paper."

Camp pastor sports unusual earwear, frightens Record reporter

Camp pastor Ryan Freed is known for many things, but setting new fashion trends isn't one of them. So it comes as no surprise that his Thursday morning venture into campy earwear raised a few eyebrows.

And even blood pressure, in some cases.

"I knew he had a bizarre approach to Nature, as in, if he sees a bug, he eats it, but he's taken things to a whole new level with his latest shenanigans," said Record reporter/editor/responsible adult Vicki Sairs. Vicki is ordinarily a calm, unflappable presence on campus, but this morning's encounter with Ryan's creepy ear decorations shook her up. "It makes it hard for me to do my job when people are running around doing silly things like clamping the empty, cast-off shells of agents of destruction on their ear lobes. Choral Camp reporting is serious business."

Agents of destruction? "Well, I don't know for sure what to call them. Are they locusts, or cicadas, or what? I went online to find out and I got the creepy crawlies just looking at all the pictures," she said. "And," she added, barely able to suppress a shiver, "the scientists who study them say they come in broods. Broods!"

This may be the year the 17-year cicadas show up in Ohio, but we didn't tell Vicki that. You shouldn't either. Hint, hint!
