Campers ~~Anonymous~~ice

By Anna Yoder

Has a family group gone missing??? Tuesday morning at breakfast Benji called the family group name “Anonymous,” but no one stood up! He said it into the mic clearly, but not a single camper joined the food line. Reporters have tried to determine what is going on with this group. However, any campers thought to be a part of the family simply look a little blank when asked about the “Anonymous” family group.

Reporters ask things like “Have you heard of the Anonymous family group?” and “Do you have any comments on your family name?” But campers and counselors simply shake their head, mumble around, or confuse the reporters even more.

That leads to a new concept. If a group's name is “Anonymous” and no members seem to respond to the name, does the group actually exist? If something can't be identified or discussed—is it actually a part of reality? If something doesn't have a name and can't be found, where and what is it?

Flash! Hot off the presses! Urgent update! It's not Anonymous, it's Anonymice, and here they are!

Recorder class serenades little bird who has met his demise

We don't know what the little bird's name was, or even what kind of bird it was. It probably lived a short bird life, as birds often do. But at least this little pájaro got a fine Choral Camp send-off.

Emily Shugert's recorder class members have noble hearts, so when they spotted a limp little bird body on the sidewalk outside of the new student center, they knew what to do. (Those windows, it must be admitted, could fool a bird in flight, since the Crew is keeping them so clean. It's a conundrum.)

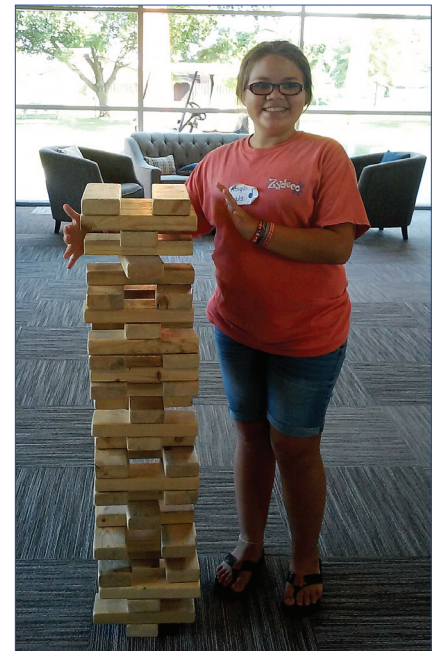

They grabbed their recorders, went outside, and surrounded the sad little fellow. “They were very serious,” said Emily. “It was good motivation. They wanted to play well.”

The class opened the serenade with “Springtime,” then finished with “Mary Had a Little Lamb.”

“They changed it to ‘Mary Had a Little Bird’ in honor of the departed guest of honor,” said Emily.

Well done, campers! The Record salutes you!

awesome Jenga tower —
learns to forgive

Jenga story from page one

A Choral Camper managed to build a Jenga tower almost as tall as herself this week.

Abigail Pauls, 12, from Philadelphia, Mississippi, said she's played the smaller version of Jenga before, but this is the only time she's played the bigger version.

Asked about her strategy, she said didn't really have one. "I just tried to find the only place that you could move a block without toppling it."

Sadly, just minutes after Abigail completed the tower, disaster struck.

"We left it standing," said Abigail, but some. . ." she paused, then continued, "some person knocked it down. We were just about to leave and they messed it up and bam!"

How did that make her feel?

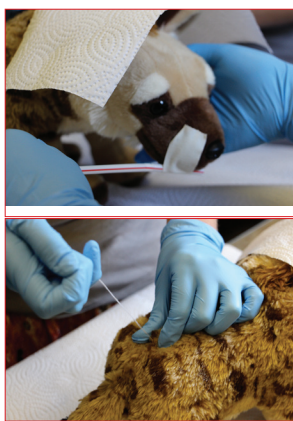

"Mad!" she said. "Because I worked hard at it."

Did she forgive the culprits?

"I forgive them. I didn't want to, but I still did."

Abigail does come from Mississippi's "City of Brotherly Love."

Mamo needs stitches! Nurses to the rescue!

The Record staff noticed a troubling gap in Mamo's back on Wednesday afternoon and immediately took the camp mascot to the nurses for repair.

Nurses Mikala Miller, Rachel Miller and Autumn Moser took charge of Mamo and mobilized for surgery.

First, they had to get a needle and thread from the official Camp Mom, Kari McGaffey. Next, they set up a sterile environment for emergency surgery. A shortage of surgical masks meant that they had to operate in more informal attire (no masks), and in fact, they didn't even scrub up.

They did, however, record the official "time in surgery" as 13:12 (1:12 pm to most of us). They intubated the patient (stuck a straw in his mouth) so he could breathe while under anesthesia, and assembled a gauze sponge and a "scalpel" (kitchen knife).

Here is a random account of things that were said in surgery:

"It's a good thing I'm wearing gloves; this needle hurts!"

"Sponge count is correct."

"What are we at?"

"One sponge and one scalpel." (They have to keep track, so they don't leave stuff inside the patient.)

"Oh, no! I lost the needle!" (Nervous laughter.) "Since the needle is gone, I might just call it done."

The needle was found and the stitches were completed. "His hair may be a little flattened down."

"He's got a little scar."

"You need a battle wound."

"End intubation. He's breathing! We're good."

Time out was 13:29; it took longer than they anticipated. Nurse Rachel fashioned a fetching hospital gown out of the gauze sponge, and Camp Director Matt spoke encouraging words to our little fighter.
