Long-time campers look ahead to next year

By Jalisa Schrock

Some campers are brand new to the magic of Choral Camp, but others are old pros and come back year after year. I visited a wonderfully unique room in Strauss Hall to talk to some of those old pros.

Keely Stiles, Mary Peterson, and Deborah Zerkle are all on their last year of Choral Camp as campers. This saddens and surprises them. As Deborah put it, “I feel like I should be a camper for a few more years yet.”

The girls love Choral Camp and even have fond memories of when all of them and their counselors injured themselves (Gaga Ball and roller-blading).

Even the walls of the room showed their love for Choral Camp. Mary used her family’s fourteen years’ worth of camp T-shirts to brighten the walls.

Staff, watch out. These three campers have planned a surprise for you that this trustworthy publication will not reveal.

In the meantime, enjoy this week of camp and be prepared to see these three finally getting to ride the Gator next year on Crew!

Who did this to me?!!

The Record had a visit from a visibly shaken Interim Camp Director this morning. Kirk, or as we like to call him, Captain Kirk, Choral Camp Commissar and King of Cool, told us that at Monday evening's dinner (the first meal at camp), he did what he always does.

"I like to explain to the campers the general rules of decorum and etiquette, you know, the way you do." Part of this, he said, is demonstrating that the pitchers on the table are for holding drinks.

"I usually pick up an empty pitcher and put it on my head, while saying, 'This is not a hat.'"

(The Record did some research and apparently there is some confusion about the whole pitcher versus hat thing.)

"Well, when I did that," Kirk went on, "I got doused with some sort of liquid that somebody had put in there!"

What was the reaction? "There was almost a gasp," Kirk said. Jen Straits got him a napkin to dry himself off, and when he said, "Oh, it's water," a modest laugh arose in the room.

"Mostly it was just such a surprise," he said. Asked about the low level of laughter, he said, "It was the first meal. By the last meal, they'll be laughing louder."

Hmmmm. That kind of sounds like an invitation, doesn't it?
