Ancient Camp Artifacts Uncovered in Culture Class Sandpit!

By Madalyn Schrader

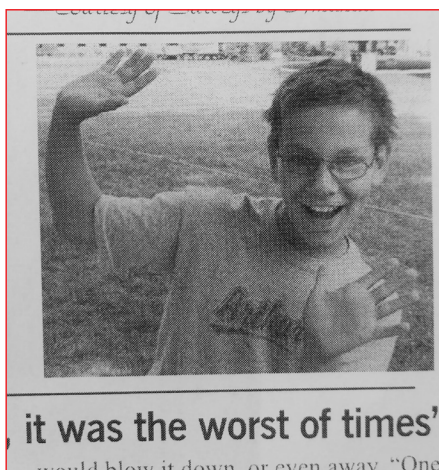

Last night, camper Lanay Sommers was enjoying a delicious pack-a-picnic dinner in the shade of the culture tent when something caught her eye: a brightly colored piece of cloth peeking out from beneath the sand in the archaeology sand pit. Lanay knew that she needed to investigate, and quickly called her fellow campers to her aid.

Utilizing their expert training in digging and sifting, campers Arwen, Clara, Simone, Kenna, Ali, Naomi, and Lorena began excavating the site. Before long, they realized that they'd stumbled across an archaeological gold mine of ancient Choral Camp artifacts! "We couldn't believe our eyes!" Kenna exclaimed when asked to describe the experience. "We found some real history!"

Among the girls' findings are a teal Choral Camp shirt from 2009 and a Rosedale Record published in 2007. After further investigation, Clara discovered that an "Erin Y." signed this shirt long ago. Could this Erin From The Past be our Camp Director Erin (Yoder) Byler?

The yellowed Rosedale Record also contains a blast from the past, featuring Beethoven Hall's very own Jared Yoder during his days as a camper (see photo on right).

Deborah Showalter, culture teacher and archaeologist extraordinaire, was thrilled to hear of the girls' discovery. "I had no idea that I'd set up our archaeological dig on an artifact site," she exclaimed. "It's truly incredible!" Ken Miller felt likewise, growing emotional as he reminisced on the past. "The girls have found relics of beautiful music and energetic campers from days gone by,"

he mused as tears filled his eyes. "What a remarkable discovery!"
