The Annual Visit: The Order of the Forks Explained

Every year, Choral Camp is visited by a mysterious association, which disappears as quickly as they arrive. The Order of the Forks appears annually to ensure that campers follow the order's one rule: to never throw silverware away. However, little is known about this order - they show up commanding attention and declaring their authority, yet they are shrouded in mystery.

After an extensive investigation, some facts have been uncovered. While the exact date is unknown, according to Obi Moore, a longtime attendee of camp, the order was established around fifteen years ago following surprising events. Reports said that campers had begun throwing cutlery away, resulting in the frantic assembling of an order to prevent this devastation.

While the order may have begun as a simple organization with the sole purpose of bringing awareness toward saving these pieces of cutlery, it has grown into a network far larger than thought possible. The current leader of the group, Sir Quintus Spoonius (although he may go by another, more familiar name), has led the group for the last couple of years. The Council of the Cutlery, those who we see in the annual announcement, is but a fraction of the total number of members in the organization. Unfortunately, the initiation process into this organization remains unknown.

Although the primary function of the order is to save cutlery from being thrown away, it also serves to support silverware, by washing them after they have been used. Other objectives of the organization are still unclear.

While still much is unknown about The Order of the Forks, we here at the Rosedale Record hope that this article has helped clear the air on this cooperative that is so influential at camp.
