Ice Ice Maybe: Counselors Forget How Legs Work

Rosedale's brave band of Choral Campers were whisked away this Wednesday for an unforgettable out-of-campus ice skating adventure. While the campers twirled, glided, and zoomed across the rink like winter Olympians, the counselors... well... didn't.

"I thought this would be a cute bonding activity," Shared Jon Luke, moments before falling for the third time in seven minutes. As it turns out gravity might be stronger in ice rinks. Campers, many of whom had never skated before, quickly discovered they were naturals. All campers circled the rink like graceful gazelles—leaving behind a trail of flailing adults in their wake.

Meanwhile, the counselors were locked in a battle for survival. Counselor Haylee clung to the wall like it was the only thing keeping her alive. By the halfway point, several counselors had formed a "Wall-Huggers Support Group," clutching the outer rail and whispering prayers between panicked giggles. It is safe to say that this experience was good character building for the staff.

Camp nurse Sarah was thankfully not needed, unless you count the emotional support she provided to the staff with tissues and repeated reminders that trying is what counts. When asked if they'd do it again, Counselors responded, "Only if I can bring training wheels next time."
