A Jonah-story fish at Choral Camp?

Could there be a Jonah-sized story waiting under the surface of the quiet Rosedale pond? There just might be! For the first time in Choral camp history, the peaceful pond tucked at the back of campus is being put to good use: as a new Choose-A-Spot activity where campers can spend an hour fishing. Things have been going excellently so far and an extraordinary amount of fish have already been caught! But is the pond really as peaceful as it looks? According to reliable Record reporters, it appears that a large secret lurks just beneath the surface!

Yesterday, after campers had left from their first fishing Choose-A-Spot, Gloria Martin, a fishing enthusiast and long-time member of Choral camp, noticed something incredibly strange. When Record Reporters caught wind of it, they immediately called her in for an interview. "I was standing at the edge of the pond cleaning up my fishing gear when all of a sudden—I saw it!" She explained, breathless. "Something large and blue and scaly appeared at the surface of the pond for a second!" The encounter had clearly flustered Gloria, who hadn't been able to fully see what was under the water. "It all happened so fast that I couldn't see what or how big it was, but it was big enough to leave the water churning behind it!" Then, leaning in close, she whispered, "I think Choral camp might have its own Ogopogo, its own Leviathan, its own Jonah-swallowing-fish!"

Record reporters are running further investigations into the situation. But the Record could still use camper help! Especially those campers who love fishing, be on the lookout for anything unusual in the pond!
