Secret Agent Duckies? 🦆

"Oh! There's one there!",
"There's another there!" "Look in the corner, there's one sitting there!" The little ducks scattered around campus have caused campers and counselors alike to gleefully point out these tiny trinkets.
However, perhaps these innocent knick-knacks hold a top-secret function. Rumor has escaped that Jace Weber himself has concocted these ducks in his secret lab to carry out his bidding. Supposedly, the ducks are to appear as a decoration or a "cute touch" per se, but there's been talk that Jace has been seen putting them in the classrooms to keep an eye on teachers to make sure they are THOROUGHLY educating their campers.

Culture teacher Megan Greenwell herself testifies "At first I thought the ducks were a fun addition to my classroom, however, I was put on edge when I spotted Jenny Miller talking into an earpiece. I listened closely and picked up quacking on the other end... but you didn't hear it from me..." History teacher Jared Yoder offers his thoughts on this peculiar situation, he attests "The ducks...the ducks don't quack like normal ducks... they have an accent... the ducks have an Australian accent for sure." Finally, our practicum teacher, Amber Hartzler, claims to have caught a glance of a webbed foot poking out of the closet in the practicum room before the webbed foot retreated back behind the door. Is Jace an Australian CIA agent? Where is the secret lab? Was this all a misunderstanding and Megan Greenwell is behind it?

Whatever is happening, one thing can be said for sure is that these are no ordinary ducks. So campers, DO NOT be fooled by these plastic figurines, if you feel like there's a pair of eyes watching you, look around your next TAP class and you may find a little duck looking in your direction.
