The Great Camp Sponge Conspiracy

Every camper has wondered it at least once:

What happens to all the old camp sponges?

To solve the mystery, we interviewed the crew chiefs: Shay, Kraig, and Elise. Their stories didn't exactly match...

Shay gave us the most normal answer. He said the old sponges are simply thrown away because they're no longer needed.

Sounds believable.

But then Elise leaned in and told us what she claimed was the real story.

According to Elise, the crew secretly saves every old sponge until the end of the season. Then they have a giant bonfire where they roast marshmallows, make s'mores, hold hands, and dance around the fire late into the night.

Just when we thought we'd uncovered the truth, Kraig shared his version.

He claimed that after dark, he sneaks all the old sponges into the woods and feeds them to the camp skunk. Apparently, the skunk refuses to eat them without a slice of cheese. Kraig also hopes the skunk doesn't leave any sponge pieces behind, or everyone would discover his secret. So... who's telling the truth?

Shay says the sponges are thrown away. Elise says there's a secret sponge bonfire.

Kraig says there's a cheese-loving sponge-eating skunk living in the woods. The mystery continues... but if you smell a campfire or spot a skunk carrying a sponge with a piece of cheese, you'll know someone isn't telling the whole story.
